Peak socials, last 30 days

14 October – 13 November 2026
Prepared by Matthew Sharpe

When something big happens in the building, Peak's socials cover it well: the Veterans Tournament got 23 posts across Instagram, Facebook and Threads. Between events they go quiet, and almost nothing points people to what Peak most needs filled: the free class, paid classes, Open Play in quiet hours, memberships and sponsors.

Bursts, then silence

Instagram posts per day. Two full weeks had no posts, including the week before tournament registration closed (2 Nov).

What was posted vs what Peak needs

Instagram posts by topic, 14 Oct – 13 Nov

Why the topics matter

- Classes turn into members: about 45% of free-class takers go on to a paid plan (Peak's figure, 11 Nov). The free class got no posts.
- Open Play has room: half of Open Play sessions ran with 2 or fewer players over the last year (Peak's CourtReserve data). Quiet times got no posts.
- The one membership post (Peak Flex, 21 Oct) had no price, no detail and no link, and drew the fewest Facebook reactions of the month (5).
- Sponsors and the April expo need a visible, steady audience to sell to. Neither appeared, and LinkedIn, where sponsors look, has no posts.

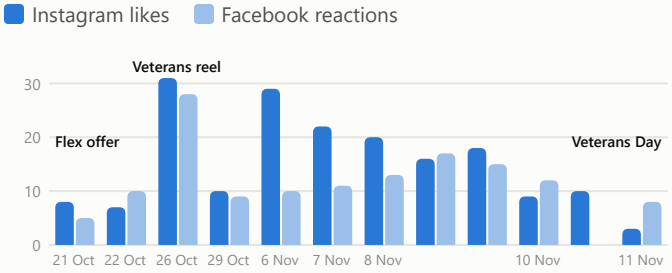

What is working

- Real people, real moments. The Give 'Em Heaven veterans reel (26 Oct) was the best post on both platforms: 31 likes on Instagram; 28 reactions, 7 shares and 1,500 plays on Facebook.
- Event coverage is thorough when it happens: six Facebook posts over the tournament, with 18- and 8-photo albums.
- Partner content travels: the two veterans posts were shared 15 times on Facebook.
- The right offer is in the bios: "Start here → FREE Learn to Play Class".
- The audience is there: earlier Peak reels reached 13,000, 4,100 and 3,700 plays when they promoted something or taught a tip.
- The reputation is strong: 4.9 stars from 585 Google reviews; 100% recommend on Facebook. Instagram's name now includes "Peak".

Engagement per post

Likes on each Instagram post (943 followers) and reactions on the same post on Facebook (1,820 followers)

Average 15 likes per Instagram post (1.6% of followers), down from 23 in early October; 12.5 reactions per Facebook post (0.7%). The three Facebook reels reached 820–1,500 plays.

Peak is being outgrown on Instagram

Instagram followers, 22 Oct and 13 Nov

Springs Pickleball posted at least 20 times in those 22 days, to Peak's 10, and its November posts included things to sign up for: a Thanksgiving event, a kids' camp, the Winter Classic, league sign-ups, a member perk. Why it grew so fast is not visible from outside.

The holes, most costly first

1. Posts don't promote what fills courts and plans. In 31 days: no posts on the free class, paid classes, Open Play times, leagues, sponsors, the pro shop or the April expo, and one membership post without a price.
2. No next step. None of the 12 posts has a booking or sign-up link, and Facebook posts, where a link works, carry none. The tournament link appeared once, as a comment. The link page in the Threads bio still leads with Mother's Day open play, Breakfast Club (May) and Wheelchair Nationals (June).
3. No steady rhythm. Two silent weeks; two-thirds of the month's posts in six days. The silent week was the run-up to the registration deadline.
4. The local-discovery channels are idle. Google Business Profile: no owner updates and no owner replies visible on 585 reviews. Facebook Events: none listed, not even the tournament or the Halloween social. The 970-member Peak Pickleball Group Page on Facebook: Peak's page last posted there on 9 Sep. LinkedIn: 99 followers, no posts.
5. Comments go unanswered. 10 member comments on Instagram and 9 on Facebook, with no reply from Peak visible on any of them. Messages and response times can't be seen from outside.
6. Dead links in Peak's own systems. CourtReserve's Instagram icon opens a profile that no longer exists (@peak.pickleballco). Facebook's About section links a TikTok with no video since May. YouTube has one video from about a year ago, Peak Golf's Instagram has 8 followers and no post since April, and Nextdoor is still unclaimed.
7. The same post everywhere. Facebook and Threads get word-for-word copies of the Instagram caption, hashtags included. One tournament reel never reached Facebook.
8. Meta tags six recent posts "AI content", visible to members. The cause can't be seen from outside; it is worth checking which app adds it.

What we can't see from outside, and need to measure results

- Meta Business Suite (90 days): reach, views, profile visits, link and bio taps, follower growth, top posts, Story views, message volume and response time.
- Google Business Profile performance: searches, views, calls, website and "Book online" clicks, directions, reviews by month.
- Google Analytics: visits arriving from Facebook, Instagram and the link page, and what those visitors did next.
- CourtReserve: weekly registrations for the free class, the tournament and socials, so posts can be matched to sign-ups.

Quick fixes that cost nothing

- Point CourtReserve's Instagram icon to @peakpickleball.us.
- Replace the out-of-date buttons on the link page (Paage) with the free class, court booking and the next event.
- Add a booking or sign-up link to every Facebook post, and a "link in bio" line on Instagram.
- List each public event as a Facebook event.
- Remove the TikTok link from Facebook's About section, or start using TikTok.
- Claim the Nextdoor page and start replying to Google reviews.

What running Peak's socials properly takes each week

Our estimate, built task by task. It is not an industry benchmark. It assumes four planned posts a week aimed at Peak's goals (two of them reels), Stories five days a week, an event listing for each public event, a weekly Google update with replies to every review, a weekly LinkedIn post for sponsors, the Facebook group, daily replies to comments and messages, and a monthly report.

Task	Assumption	Hours / week
Plan the week: calendar, check the CourtReserve schedule for quiet slots and upcoming events	weekly	1.5
Shoot on the floor: classes, open play, leagues, members	2 sessions × 1.5 h	3.0
Edit reels	2 × 1.25 h	2.5
Design graphics and carousels: offers, schedules, sponsor thank-yous	2 × 45 min	1.5
Captions with a call to action and link, written for each platform	4 × 20 min	1.5
Publish or schedule on Instagram, Facebook and Threads (plus YouTube Shorts if kept), then check	4 × ~20 min	1.5
Stories	5 × 15 min	1.25
Comments, messages, tags and group questions	~20 min a day	2.3
Google Business Profile: weekly update, review replies, questions	weekly	0.75
Facebook event listings	1 × 20 min	0.3
LinkedIn post for sponsors and corporate bookings	1 × 30 min	0.5
Facebook group post and moderation	weekly	0.4
Monthly report, link page and profile upkeep	2 h a month + 30 min a week	1.0
Normal week		about 18 (15–20)
Event weekend (tournament, social night): shooting through the day, same-day posts, recap	per event	+6 to 10

Set against the current set-up

- As described to us on 2 Nov, social media sits inside one in-house role that also covers video editing, photography and video at events and daily play, graphic design, and the pro shop (banners, merch, shirts, logos), with a wish for more time out front with members.
- Social alone, done to the list above, is close to half a full-time week, before any of that role's other four jobs.
- The last 30 days fit that picture: strong coverage when an event is in the building, then no time left for planning, promotion, replies or the quieter channels. That is a capacity problem, not a talent one.

Questions for Tyler

1. Roughly how many hours a week go to social now, and what else does the same person cover?
2. Who holds admin on each account, and who answers messages and Google reviews?
3. Can we see the Meta, Google Business Profile, Analytics and CourtReserve figures listed on page 2?
4. Which comes first for the socials: free-class sign-ups, Open Play in quiet hours, upgrades, sponsors or the April expo?
5. Keep or close TikTok, YouTube, Peak Golf's Instagram and the link page?
6. Is there any budget for boosting posts? None were running on 4 Nov.

Not known, and not assumed here: the in-house team's hours, how they split between duties, and whether anyone else posts or answers messages. Counts are the public ones on 13 Nov; reach, clicks and messages need Peak's own account data.
