FIELD CRIB SHEET · EMAILING AN AGREEMENT TO BE SIGNED

You are not in the room. Two rules get harder.

Everything on the door sheet still applies. These are the two things that break when the agreement is sent instead of handed over — and both of them break quietly.

Never send it with the deadline date blank.

A blank or wrong cancellation date means the three-day window never starts and the right to cancel stays open for three years — no compensation for work already done. Emailing makes this easy to get wrong, because the deadline depends on the day they sign, and you do not control that day.

The two that are different

1. You cannot email the part you have to say out loud
   The law requires you to tell the buyer orally, at the time they sign, that they can cancel. An email does not do it, and neither does the box on the form. Be on the phone while they sign. Say it plainly — "before you sign: you have three business days to change your mind, and the two cancellation forms in there are how you do it." Then write in the job notes that you said it, and when.

2. The date is theirs, not yours — so give the window generously
   The deadline is midnight of the third business day after the day they actually sign. If you fill in a date based on the day you sent it and they sign three days later, you have given them a shorter window than the law requires. That is the defect.

   > THE RULE THAT KEEPS YOU SAFE
   >
   > A window that is too long is compliant. A window that is too short is not. When in doubt, put a later date, never an earlier one. It costs you a few days of waiting and it cannot be held against you.

The sequence that works

1. Agree the signing day on the phone first
   Not "sometime this week." A day. Everything below hangs off it.

2. Fill it in completely, then send
   Price, scope, date of transaction, section 6, and both cancellation forms — seller name, seller address, date, deadline. The law says you complete those, not the customer. Send every page — five for the service agreement, six for the maintenance one — and never a blank template.

3. Call them as they sign, and say it out loud
   See above. This is the step that gets skipped.

4. Get the signed copy back and file it the same day
   With the DocuSign certificate of completion, which is the evidence of when they signed. Download both out of the envelope and into the job file.

5. Then wait. Do not schedule the crew inside the window
   Same rule as the door: cancel after work has started and Sixfold is owed nothing.

DOCUSIGN — WHAT IT FIXES, AND WHAT IT DOES NOT

This sheet used to say there was no e-signature system. Sixfold now sends through DocuSign, and its certificate of completion is the proof of when they signed — file it with the signed copy. ⚑ It changes neither rule above: it does not fill the deadline in, and it does not say anything out loud. If they sign later than the day you agreed, the window you wrote is too short — void and reissue.

When not to send it at all

- You have not walked the property. The price comes off a counted sheet, not a phone call.
- The office has not agreed the price. Never send an agreement to find out what someone will pay.
- They want to start immediately. That is a conversation, not a document — sheet 2 of the door crib sheet covers it.
- You are not sure the cancellation rule applies because it was not sold at their home. Send the forms anyway. Including them when they were not required costs nothing. Leaving them out when they were required is the three-year problem.

Companion to field-instructions, the door crib sheet — that one still governs everything signed in person. Sources: 16 CFR 429.1(a), (b) and (e); C.R.S. 5-3-402 to 5-3-405. Not legal advice; the pack has not been reviewed by an attorney.